Delinquent behavior originating from educational difficulties has been documented in previous studies however, the majority of these findings go beyond past research. Undergraduate and callous-unemotional personality and impulsivity relate to delinquency. Therefore the only significant regression analysis revealed that only callous-unemotional personality and impulsivity relate to delinquency. All research are also discussed.

Recent crime statistics indicate that young people commit only about 7% of the crime in Canada (2012), roughly 4% in the U.S. (2011). Similarly, in Canada, about 7% of people arrested for delinquency are under the age of 18 (2011). Additionally, many of these youths have educational difficulties and educational difficulties are associated with delinquency (Bor et al. 2010). Furthermore, delinquency is a risk factor for antisocial personality disorder and antisocial behavior (Sutker et al. 2000). Mental health problems therefore the population is at an increased risk. Antisocial personality disorder and antisocial behavior (Sutker et al. 2000), mental health problems therefore the population is at an increased risk.
