The Marcotte Trilogy and the Further Fragmentation of Federal Banking Powers in Canada

M.H. Ogilvie In the recent Marcotte trilogy the Supreme Court of Canada re-confirmed that the federal banking power may be shared with the provinces in certain respects, especially in relation to consumer protection. This further fragmentation of the federal power means that banking has become both more complex and expensive for all concerned.

Tael One Partners: Contractual Interpretation as an Iterative Process

Konrad Rodgers and Joe-han Ho This article examines Tael One Partners within the framework of the iterative process to contractual interpretation. We explain the importance of the iterative process, and argue that the case demonstrates the Supreme Court’s implicit affirmation and practical application of the iterative process, and discuss its implications for the lending industry.
Journal of Business Law

Issue 5 2015

Table of Contents

Articles
The Marcotte Trilogy and the Further Fragmentation of Federal Banking Powers in Canada
M.H. Ogilvie

Tael One Partners: Contractual Interpretation as an Iterative Process
Konrad Rodgers and Joe-han Ho

A Growing Good Faith in Contracts
Julie-Anne Tarr

Marine Insurance Law in Japan: A Structure Based on a Combination of Civil Law and English Marine Policy Wordings
Satoshi Nakaide

416

Book Reviews

432