Journal of Intellectual Property Law & Practice

IP jury trials—trouble ahead?
Finding Vreda and Felding. the Dutch Supreme Court decision on escitalopram
Remedies for trade mark infringement in Tanzania: principles and practice
Proposed amendments to US patent law: will this affect the reality of patent litigation practice?
An epilogue to Svensson: the same old new public and the worms that didn’t turn
A guide to US patent challenge procedures under the Leahy-Smith America Invents Act
Trade secrets: the new EU enforcement regime
Introducing reality into trade mark law
From GRUR Int: Defence strategies in the age of social media
From GRUR Int: Financial compensation for personality right violation on the internet
From GRUR Int: Fleurov: when keyword advertising may exceptionally be a trade mark infringement after all

Includes content from

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS
Editorial
Luxembourg, we have a problem: where have the Advocates General gone?
Eleonora Rosati .......................................................... 619

Current Intelligence
Scottish Court of Session considers whether patent can be interpreted without expert evidence:
Susan Snedden ............................................................. 620
Red Bull v The Bull Dog: 'due cause' in trade mark infringement
Nathan Smith .............................................................. 621
Enhanced distinctiveness irrelevant to assessing likelihood of confusion
Désirée Fields .............................................................. 623
A five-star debate
Deborah R. C. Jackson .................................................... 624
'It's so good, I put my name on it': the unexpected pitfalls of registering a personal name as a trade mark
Tessa Meyrick .............................................................. 625
Federal Court of Canada promotes a purposive interpretation of the remedial provisions of the Trademarks Act, with a view to providing greater access to relief
Graham A. Hood ........................................................... 626
Little glee for Twentieth Century Fox
Olivia Bennett ............................................................... 628
CJEU on communication to the public and national systems of collective rights management
Eleonora Rosati ............................................................. 630
CJEU allowed website-blocking injunctions with some reservations
Martin Huövel ............................................................... 631
US Second Circuit clarifies the statute of limitations for copyright infringement claims
Jenny Bonwick .............................................................. 634
Magnetic v PMS: no RCD infringement on appeal
David Stone and William Corbett .................................... 635

Articles
IP jury trials—trouble ahead?
Robert M. Kunstadt ......................................................... 639
Finding Vredopatenting: the Dutch Supreme Court decision on escitalopram
Alexander Tsoutsanis ...................................................... 644
Remedies for trade mark infringement in Tanzania: principles and practice
Paul F. Kihwelo .............................................................. 650
Proposed amendments to US patent law: will this affect the reality of patent litigation practice?
Bertrand Sautier .............................................................. 656
An epilogue to Svensson: the same old new public and the worms that didn’t turn
Toby Headdon .............................................................. 662
A guide to US patent challenge procedures under the Leahy-Smith America Invents Act
Maxwell J. Petersen ......................................................... 669
Trade secrets: the new EU enforcement regime
Gill Grassie ................................................................. 677
Introducing reality into trade mark law
Ilanah Fhiina ................................................................. 684

From GRUR Int.
Defence strategies in the age of social media
Claudia Meindel ............................................................. 688
Financial compensation for personality right violation on the internet
Prof. Dr Jutta Steindel-Vorwachs ...................................... 691
Fleurop: when keyword advertising may exceptionally be a trade mark infringement after all
Birgit Clark ................................................................. 693

IP in Review
Intellectual property law of plants
Gert Würtenerberger ....................................................... 696
Uncontroversial, practical and written at the right level of detail
Saleman Ali ................................................................. 697

Erratum
Vehicle Navigation System .............................................. 699