Theoretical Criminology

Special Issue: Visual Culture and the Iconography of Crime and Punishment
Edited by Michelle Brown and Eamonn Carrabine

Contents

Introduction
Introduction to special issue on Visual Culture and the Iconography of Crime and Punishment 127
Nicole Rafter

Articles
Seeing things: Violence, voyeurism and the camera 134
Eamonn Carrabine

From object to encounter: Aesthetic politics and visual criminology 159
Alison Young

Visual criminology and carceral studies: Counter-images in the carceral age 176
Michelle Brown

(Un)seeing like a prison: Counter-visual ethnography of the carceral state 198
Judah Schept

‘No one wins. One side just loses more slowly’: The Wire and drug policy 224
Stephen Wakeman
Book reviews

Richard Quinney, Things Once Seen
Reviewed by Sandra Walklate

Kenneth D Tunnell, Once Upon a Place: The Fading of Community in Rural Kentucky
Reviewed by Sandra Walklate

Keith Hayward and Mike Presdee (eds), Framing Crime: Cultural Criminology and the Image
Reviewed by Danielle Dirks

Philippe Bourgois and Jeff Schonberg, Righteous Dopefiend
Reviewed by Stephanie Kane

Marit Paasche and Judy Radul (eds), A Thousand Eyes: Media Technology, Law and Aesthetics
Reviewed by Kate West

Leonidas Chelioti (ed.), The Arts of Imprisonment: Control, Resistance and Empowerment
Reviewed by John Kerr

Valerie Hartouni, Visualising Atrocity: Arendt, Evil, and the Optics of Thoughtlessness
Reviewed by Wayne Morrison

Christian Delage and Peter Goodrich (eds), The Scene of the Mass Crime: History, Film, and International Tribunals
Reviewed by Wayne Morrison

Film review

Joshua Oppenheimer (dir.), The Act of Killing
Reviewed by Nicole Rafter

Visit tcr.sagepub.com
Free access to tables of contents and abstracts. Site-wide access to the full text for members of subscribing institutions

Introduction

Introduction to spoken Visual Culture and Iconography of Criminology of Punishment

Nicole Rafter
Northeastern University, USA

Just before I started writing this introduction and got a verbal description, execution of a woman identified only as a ‘family dispute’ had been her husband (www.rawa.org/murder-w.htm). Undoubtedly she had killed. In the back of a deep blue burqa, Zarima was driving mothers and children. Zarima, in a blue burqa that it seemed she couldn’t move from the truck, led her to the center of the baned man put a Kalashnikov rifle to her head and pushed her burqa over the legs of her motionless, pale-blue heap (See Figure 1). Conventional criminology, interested in areas they control, and that their judicial system has mandated that men—who judged and executed women. From the story we might learn that men who judge and execute women. From the story we might learn that men—who judged and executed women. From the story we might learn that men—judged and executed women. From the story we might learn that men—who judged and executed make—a misreading of Zarima’s death. The images tell us that these areas they control, and that their just system has mandated that men—judged and executed women. But I think that is a misreading.

One woman in a burqa, who did not want to sit in a truck, pushed her small children and told her husband, ‘I want to see.’

Corresponding author:
Nicole Rafter, Northeastern University, 400 Huntington Avenue, Boston, MA 02115, USA
Email: n.rafter@neu.edu