Law both regulates cultural representations and creates them. These dual themes will be explored in a conference focused upon the twin strands of law and visual culture, and law and gender.

How does law regulate gender; how does it regulate images? What is/are the relationship/s between visual culture and the gendering of law? How have gendered divisions structured the legal profession and practice, and what is the role of the visual in understanding such complexities? How can visual culture and representation challenge or enlighten the gendered dimensions of law?

This conference is aimed at exploring the intersections of law, gender, and the visual in an effort to address such questions and related concerns.

Conference date: 3rd-4th September 2014
Location: St Mary's University, Twickenham, London TW1 4SX
Registration fee: £100
